STILLWATER

VAGISHA PUROHIT

Private & Confidential - Range Report

VAGISHA PUROHIT

	Burn	Light	Shade	Shadow
Clarity	Conservative	Grounded	Visionary	Unrealistic
	Vague	Big Picture	Rigorous	Pedantic
Honesty	Uncertain	Open	Certain	Closed
	Serious	Sincere	Fun	Frivolous
Ownership	Clinical	Logical	Intuitive	Emotional
	Controlling	Proactive	Accepting	Fatalistic
Win-Win	Arrogant	Self-Assured	Unpretentious	Self-Deprecating
	Lone Warrior	Self Sufficient	Interdependent	Dependent
	Pushover	Considerate	Assertive	Pushy
	Guarded	Alert	Trusting	Naive
Commitment	Tentative	Sensible	Adventurous	Reckless
	Repetitive	Persistent	Innovative	Unfocused

Key	Burn	Light	Shade	Shadow
	A likely weakness	A dominant strength
	A possible weakness	A strength	A complementary strength
	An occasional weakness	An occasional strength	An occasional strength
	Infrequently displayed behaviour	Infrequently displayed behaviour	Infrequently displayed behaviour	Behaviours I tend to resist

CLARITY

Clarity is about knowing specifically what you want to do, why you want to do it and what the prices are that you need to be willing to pay to make it happen

You take into account the existing reality. You are grounded, realistic and practical. Nobody can say you have your head in the clouds. At the same time you also believe great things are possible. You do not let the current situation stop you from imagining what could be. People may call you ambitious or idealistic but one thing is clear, there are difficult things that need to be done and you want to do them.

You see the big picture and how the pieces fit together. You intuitively see what is the most important thing to focus on. This gift is difficult to teach, you just see it. Sometimes however you do not make a detailed enough plan for how to go about implementing what needs to be done and this means that careless errors could occur. One way around this is to make a timeline for when you will do what and what you will need from whom. You could also get someone to check your work. You are rarely off track in general but the devil is in the details. This may feel like you are getting bogged down and there is a chance you will find it tedious. It may even feel like the work is beneath you. But stick at it because otherwise a minor oversight could wreck your masterplan.

HONESTY

Honesty is about looking at a situation in an unbiased way so you can respond appropriately - neither overreacting nor underreacting.

You come across as someone who is open to small changes in your environment and new perspectives. You are not closed to the data coming in. You can tweak your plans and be flexible when required. It is not your dominant strength but you do like certainty. Once you have made your mind you move forward. Others may become indecisive when things do not go according to plan but you stay on track. You have strong principles and you stick to them under pressure. On some rare occasions you may feel overwhelmed by the number of opinions.

You know when to buckle down and do what needs to be done. You are sincere and conscientious about your responsibilities and people know they can rely on you. It is not your dominant strength but you do come across as fun and radiating enthusiasm. You provide a much needed lightness to your environment and this helps the people around you from getting morbidly depressed about their work. On some rare occasions you get a tad too serious and end up putting unnecessary pressure on yourself. This is particularly true when results are under pressure or when you are behind schedule or have made a mistake. You hate letting people down.

OWNERSHIP

Ownership is about focusing on the choices and decisions within your control. Taking ownership means relinquishing blaming circumstances, others or yourself.

It is not your dominant strength but you do like to think things through logically. You look at the data objectively, figure out what it means and the answer is obvious. You bring neutrality, fairness and intellectual honesty to your decisions. At the same time you also listen to your intuition. You know there is a wiser part of you that you can tap into. You trust your gut and follow your heart. It rarely leads you astray.

One of your dominant strengths is that you do what needs to be done. You look at the choices available to you and move forward proactively. You are the captain of your ship and the master of your destiny. Sometimes however you can push too hard and when things don't pan out you can come across as critical of others or be overly harsh on yourself This may be because you think that complacency is unforgiveable - especially in yourself, but patience is a power as strong as action. And remember that the people who have spent their lives up on mountains thinking about life talk about acceptance as the faster path, not unceasing effort.

WIN-WIN

Win-Win is about your approach to relationships. It is about how you balance your needs against those of others.

One of your dominant strengths is that you come across as confident and self assured. You are comfortable telling people what you are good at and how you can help them. This creates credibility and provides them assurance. It is not your dominant strength but you do do not come across as someone who tries to project yourself to be anything other than what you are. You are unpretentious and honest and people can't help but like and trust you. Sometimes however you may be perceived by those with conservative thinking as slightly arrogant in your speech. It may be in certain cases because they are insecure and your confidence threatens them but it's definitely something to think about. One thing you could do is to tone it down when you are with softer speaking or more retiring people. It's a slight modification but you may be surprised at how much of a change it creates in your relationships with these people.

You come across as someone who can take care of yourself. You are independent and free and people admire this about you. It is not your dominant strength but you do have a flourishing network of loving relationships. You do not hesitate to ask for help because you know there are people around you who care about you deeply. And besides you know that in the long term you give as much back if not more. On some rare occasions you can try to do things all by yourself. You think it's taking responsibility but by not asking for help you can burn yourself out and what's more things happen faster and better than you probably realize with the help of others.

One of your dominant strengths is that you care about others. You make sure you consider others' interests any time you make a decision. People can't help liking you for this. It is not your dominant strength but you do take a stand when you need to. It's rare that anyone can take advantage of you or push you around. You are willing to argue and push back on matters of principle and people respect you for it. Sometimes however you can be too accommodating. You can say yes when you mean to say now and take on too much work or compromise on your own objectives in order to preserve the relationship with others. A potential area of development is is therefore to learn to push back when required and say no in a polite and gentle but firm way. It will feel initially like you are being mean and letting people down but if you ask, you'll find that all your well wishers have been wishing this for you. Once you learn this skill you will feel liberated. And guess what.. your niceness is not going anywhere either.

You have a good judge of character. You can quickly spot the people who might let you down due to insincerity, lack of competence or just plain demotivation. It is not your dominant strength but you do trust others easily. This is the gift of inspiring leaders. It lightens the load, empowers others, makes them feel needed and trusted and is just a more fun way to live life. On some rare occasions you can be overcareful. You probably don't realize this or justify your alertness as being required. But it's probably slowing you down and taking an invisible emotional toll. You may not feel this because over a period of time this has become transparent through accustomization.

COMMITMENT

Commitment is about your response to roadblocks. Commitment is defined as being willing to do whatever it takes.

It is not your dominant strength but you do take care to think things through before jumping into something new. You are sensible and take your time if required. Sometimes however you may think too hard or too long going over the same options again without making headway on what the decision should be.

One of your dominant strengths is that you have staying power and persistence. If at first you don't succeed you'll try again. You know that the hardest rock can be worn away by the wind or water over time and you have the resilience to keep coming back. It is not your dominant strength but you do not come across as someone who is rarely stuck for good ideas. You are innovative, inventive and creative and where others might see dead ends you're able to find the secret door by thinking laterally. Sometimes however you get stuck despite your best efforts. This can be extremely frustrating because you know that you're working hard. Your natural instinct is to work even harder but that's not always the only answer. A potential area of development is to step back and try something new. Brainstorm, discuss, read, take a break, get ideas from others. If you can add a bit of lateral thinking to your sweat and tears there are few obstacles that can stand before you. You know this.. What you don't realize just how much creativity lies within you. Try it out.. take it for a spin.